Visitors will be led through the immersive experience with the sights and sounds of ancient Peru.

"We have tried to make a script, that will allow the people to have an experience. To experience what we in the Andean region... the way people related to their territory, our ancestors, the way they lived and the way they created their world," Holmquist told CBS12 News. "With this immersive experience, we are going into the Andean world, first presenting how the cosmovision developed."

The exhibit took two years to organize and put together. (WPEC)

Visitors will walk through the displayed artifacts, which tell the story of how the ancient people modeled their world, how they related to the force of nature, animals, and the afterlife.
