Looking for something to keep the kids entertained this school holidays? And by kids, we obviously mean mid-30s man-children with a penchant for paleontology (guilty!). Well, Universal Pictures is serving up the goods this September, with the Sydney launch of the internationally renowned Jurassic World: The Exhibition. Hold on to your butts, this one is going to be big.

A stunning homage to the beloved franchise, Jurassic World: The Exhibition is an immersive experience that promises to bring fans face-to-face with some of films' most iconic characters. Described as a 'family-friendly' exhibition, the new attraction gives you the chance to explore some key moments from the series, starting first by walking through the iconic "Jurassic World" gates.

From here, Jurassic World: The Exhibition reads like a geek's wishlist. Hit the trail and you'll encounter a life-sized brachiosaurus, velociraptors, and if you're (un)lucky, even a Tyrannosaurus Rex. Better yet, the exhibit organisers have confirmed newer additions to the franchise, such as "Bumpy" from the popular Netflix animated series Jurassic World: Camp Cretaceous series will make an appearance, as well.

The launch of Jurassic World: The Exhibition in Sydney comes amid the franchise's 30th anniversary and follows a series of sold-out engagements across the globe. Over the last few months, the attraction has nabbed record ticket sales across London, Paris, Madrid, Shanghai, Cologne, San Diego and many more. Now, it's finally time for Sydneysiders to step foot inside Richard Hammond's beleaguered park of wonders.

Jurassic World: The Exhibition kicks off on Friday, 22 September 2023 and will run for a limited time. You can find the blockbuster new attraction at the newly reimagined SuperLuna Pavilion, Sydney Showground at Sydney Olympic Park, with the waitlist now open for tickets.
